User Guide on Embedding Campaign Widgets

1. Introduction

We kindly ask you to embed the widgets of our campaign into your website. The idea of a "widget" is straightforward: it is a small piece of software run with Javascript. The software is used on a page of a website to give the user changing information (in our case the number of signatories).

We have already produced the widget. There are two versions:

The Embedded version = the widget you see directly on a site including the text of thepetition and the fields to sign the petition, see below.
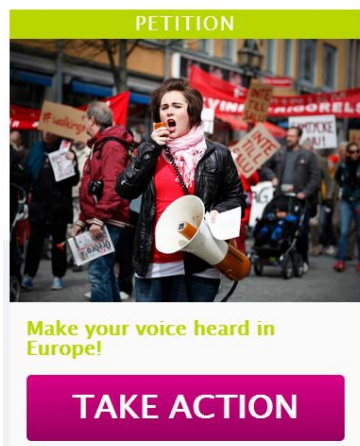

The Popup widget is the one you place on a homepage or somewhere else. This widget links to the embedded one when you click on "take action."

2. How to embed a widget into your website

Every website is different. Whilst some use still good-old html code to build their websites, you are most likely using a "content-management-system" (CMS) to update your website. Usually, you can simply place the code between other texts – simply paste it into a page or new article.

Example:

Democracy International's website is run with Drupal. Here you need to change the editor of your Content Management System to source code.

Then insert the jaca script code into the source code, for English the code of the widget is: <script type="text/javascript" src="https://www.policat.org/api/js/widget/4720"></script>
In some content management systems, such as wordpress, you simply add a "HTML-box" from your plug-in repository. Then go into "Options" or "Settings" or "Content" of this HTML-box and paste your widget code there. Once done, you can place the HTML-box whereever your widget should appear on your website.

Note: Your CMS system must allow you to use html/javascript. If it doesn't work in the first place, ask your web administrator to change settings of your CMS system.
